

QUALITY SYSTEMS' NEXTGEN® TECHNOLOGY SELECTED BY SADLER CLINIC TO SUPPORT INTERCONNECTIVITY EFFORTS

Integrated Platform will Assist Large Multi-specialty Group with Proactively Tracking Quality-of-care Indicators across Multiple Locations, Specialties

IRVINE, Calif. - December 8, 2008 -Quality Systems, Inc. (NASDAQ: QSII), announced today that its wholly owned NextGen Healthcare Information Systems, Inc., subsidiary has been selected by Sadler Clinic, a large multi-specialty group based in Montgomery County, Tex., to provide a suite of enterprise software solutions. Products selected for implementation include NextGen® EHR (Electronic Health Record), EPM (Enterprise Practice Management), the NextMD® patient portal, and NextGen ICS (Image Control System).

With ten locations, Sadler Clinic provides services to patients in more than 30 different specialty areas. The NextGen suite of products will be implemented in all ten locations, and will help physicians and staff to provide the highest quality of care as well as better management of patient information across the enterprise through a robust, single-source solution. Sadler Clinic strives to provide an excellent ambulatory care experience for the citizens of Montgomery County and is investing in NextGen technology to further its commitment to being a leader in physician-patient care integration.

"By connecting physicians across our enterprise, we are aiming to become more efficient in the delivery of care while also proactively tracking quality-care indicators and improving upon those indicators as needed," said Shari Fox, M.D. of Sadler Clinic. "After conducting a rigorous selection process, we believe the specialty content, flexibility and usability of the NextGen platform will enable us to meet our unique clinical and administrative needs - whether that is dealing with prescriptions, communicating with colleagues or billing for services rendered."
